

I believe that they should revise the telephone protection act. The invasion of privacy to solicit unwanted commerce is a violation of privacy and something the fcc and ftc should regulate. One key element in implementing the act, is the notification to people who and where they need to contact to get on the do not call list. As a recipient of numerous telemarketing over the years and little to no knowledge of the procedures to get on the do not call list, a mass mailing or some other type of notification to the public or participating states would be in order. The grey area i see is the soliciting of non-profit organizations in this bill. Such soliciting calls as local law enforcement associations, firefighters of america and so on needs also to be considered in this regulation. Since the calls are solicited through telephone lines in which the phone companies supervise I believe that they play a essential part in the regulation of these "telemarketers". This soliciting over the years has been annoying and unwanted, the regulation of this telephone soliciting is essential in the privacy and protection of the people and should be enacted as soon as possible.
